

Even in these times of economic uncertainty, we all appreciate that in the grand scheme of things we live in luxury compaired to some poor souls in this world.

And many Brides-to-be will have a wave of guilt about the almost extravagant spending that occurs simply to make their wedding day perfect. Well there could be an answer to helping while you spend on your wedding jewellery!

'Pride and Grace' sell graceful adornments to wear with the pride that the entire price tag is donated to the charity 'Children on the Edge' who are protecting vulnerable children from being trafficked in Thailand. Pride and Grace receive no money from sales as 100% of proceeds are donated directly to 'Children on the Edge'.

The company offers a stunning collection of 18K yellow and white gold plated bridal jewellery, including necklace and earring sets, tiaras, cufflinks, and hair accessories for bridesmaids. All pieces are produced with stringent environmental standards and sent in beautiful 100% biodegradable recycled gift boxes. They also ship the jewellery worldwide with free postage to all customers.

Carol Shipley of Pride and Grace said of the cause "Sadly, there are many unaccompanied children from Burma in Thailand who, without parental care or guidance, are at risk of falling prey to traffickers who patrol the area vigilantly".

"Money raised from Pride and Grace sales help to pay for vulnerable children in Thailand to attend school, and, for those without a place to stay, to live at the Children's Crisis Centre. The Children's Crisis Centre adds the support of a place to stay, nutritious meals and counselling where needed."
